market offers. It is true that co-operation has stopped in. It has in some provinces, provided the means whereby, an early improved variety is perfected and made ready for use, and can be recovered from the Government. In every village over large areas and can be multiplied a thousandfold; it has enabled the price of the seed to be reduced, and the best price to be secured for the produce. It has placed within reach of the cultivator cheap manure and implements, tools, and apparatus by experiment. It has supplied to small holders by the use of co-operation the improvement of the village lands; and it has provided the means by which useful information can be disseminated.

The association or co-operation with agricultural improvements may assume different forms. In one place the co-operative society may perform the functions of an agricultural association; in another agricultural societies or unions may have a separate existence, but may work in the closest touch with the co-operative movement. But wherever agriculture and co-operation have experienced the advantages which can be derived from association with the other, they are fast developing a truly organic association and there can be little doubt that before many years this will be the case throughout India. It has indeed been stated by capable observers that the efforts of these two departments have made a deeper impression on the life of the people than any of the other measures which Government is engaged in pursuing.

3. But these direct economic improvements are not the only benefit which co-operation is conferring on the country. Co-operation has been, in the widest sense of the term, education, both intellectual and moral. What men are associated for business purposes, they find the need of education. There are tangible reasons for learning to keep accounts, to sign promissory notes, to read price lists and statistics, and knowledge of them had most been the choice of a frank while members who are able to read simple co-operative literature will take a more intelligent interest in their society and in the progress of the movement. Illiteracy is a hindrance to the movement, and just as co-operation leads to a demand for literacy, so literacy encourages the demand for co-operation. The effect of co-operative, however, extends beyond this. It does more than merely provide cheap credit; it encourages thrift. The attention for attention to a society is a man's character and not his wealth, and men, when brought together for their common good and when studying their common trade, have influenced each other's conduct and advanced each other's interests in ways previously unknown in this country. The fact that the members are ultimately responsible for the payment of the debts of each and every member, co-operation is a powerful check on expenditure on unproductive purposes greater than that absolutely required by public opinion, and wasteful expenses have accordingly been curtailed. Extravagance and gambling have been reformed or excluded from societies. Self-control, gentleness, straightness, honesty, self-respect, discipline, contentment, and thrift have been encouraged. In some areas litigation has markedly decreased. In others the common lands have been used to erect schools, to provide scholarships, to distribute quinine, to provide drinking water, to drain streets. The progress of co-operative credit has led to saving banks, loan funds and pensions for the poor. There are here first-hand knowledge of co-operative practice are replaced in their appreciation of the change which the movement is making in the character of the people affected by it, and it is important to bear in mind that co-operation has not merely a natural law directing cheap money, or for forwarding the economic measures of members, but it is a social policy educational influence and, as such, is deserving of the warmest support from those who care the welfare of the people at large. The wronging feeling of the members have disappeared, the arbitrariness of disputes and with other duties which belong to the traditional village psychology, and there is now reason to think that the necessity of war, and the solidarity of feeling inherent in the movement, may lead to a revival of the corporate village life which has been so weakened by the disintegrating influence of modern times.

4. In India, as in Europe, the greatest obstacle to economic progress has been the difficulty of obtaining capital of reasonable interest for peasant agriculture and for small industrial enterprises, and the foundation of the whole structure of co-operation, both in India and in Europe, has been the credit society. The provision of credit for large landowners is a marked feature of co-operation in some European countries, and there are no doubt openings in India, towards which the progress of several provinces have already been feeling their way, for organizing the credit of the large landed proprietors. But an organization of this kind runs as an entirely different feeling from that of the ordinary credit society, and it is necessary to refer to it further in this connection. The Indian Act of 1913 was expressly intended to encourage "small and simple credit societies for small and simple trade" and these will continue to be the main support of the country which have thus been restricted. To those not conversant with co-operation there the word may also appear unusual. The average number of members in a society in this country is 25 only, and the average working capital of a society does not exceed £200, the actual figures in many societies being of course often far smaller than these. These are small societies the capital of which is confined to banks, but some of them have originated from petty beginnings of twenty and thirty rupees, and the strength of the co-operative movement rests in a large number of such big strong societies. Some 300 credit societies are concerned with shares and industries other than agriculture, the progress of which are generally better than in the United Provinces, Bombay and Mysore. These societies are mostly for the benefit of the poor classes of officers, workers for the most part, but others, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, shoemakers, etc., are also represented. Similar societies have been formed for districts in office, but they have lately been used also in regions in the Indian Army. The great bulk, however, of the twelve thousand credit societies in the country are for the benefit of the agricultural population, and the chief object held in view from the beginning has been to provide reasonable credit for small agriculturists, who represent the backbone of the Indian people. The problem of agricultural credit has been looked on as more important than that of industrial credit, and the efforts of Government have been mainly directed to the aid of the small agriculturist.

5. The small agriculturist has hitherto been dependent for his funds on the small money-lender. It cannot be expected that the small money lender, who takes great risks and who has to make his living, can lend at a low rate of interest. He has in many instances made advances of his capital for interest, spending as he does in disbursement, however he incurs himself against loss by making the loans; but, on the other hand, the traditions of past generations of the country have probably led to higher rates of interest.

being charged than are now responsible. The extension of co-operative credit entails—and is bound to entail—the downgrading of credit dealings between the money lender and the peasant, for for soever as the money lender depends on money-lending for his existence, he finds the extension of the movement inimical to his interests. He loses much of his existence, and in return the peasant has to return his runs of interest. It is not surprising therefore that he should, in many instances, have placed obstacles in the way of co-operation. It is not, however, even organized combined opposition so it. Cases have indeed been known in which Government servants related to, or sympathetic with, the money-lending class have in their official capacity obstructed the progress of co-operation, and very much of the kind which, brought to light and proved should be dealt with severely. But although co-operative credit necessarily interferes with the business of the small money-lender there is no reason why he too should not participate in its benefits. In the past he has fulfilled a useful function in the rural economy of the country, and if he recognizes himself in co-operation he will continue to do so in the future. It is to be hoped that he will soon realize, as his heavy losses have already reached, not only that co-operation has come to stay and that it is useless to oppose it, but also that it has a useful and not unremunerative place in his contribution for all the old local banking agencies. The new business of co-operative institutions is restricted to particular classes and protected by peculiar safeguards; it also must fall gradually and should therefore prove attractive to money-lenders and others who have funds to invest. It is always open to the village banker to turn his funds either in the village or elsewhere, or in one or other of the various credit agencies, and these will afford him a scope for investment much less questionable than the traditional banking business of the village, while the increased wealth of the villages will, in the end, open up many opportunities for the profitable extension of his capital.

10. The object of co-operation is to obtain reasonable credit from reasonable creditors. This is not necessarily always credit and the price of credit which reasonable creditors would vary very widely in different parts of India. A rate which would be considered extraordinarily low in Upper India would often be looked on as exorbitant in parts of Gujarat and Madras, and it is no part of the functions of co-operation to reduce too rapidly the rates of interest to a uniformly low level throughout India. No doubt, as the movement strengthens, the rates of interest will everywhere tend to fall, and the process of taking place before our eyes. But a debtor who has been accustomed to high rates can only be turned to debt by gradual relief, and the sudden opening up of funds credit has no other led, to his ruin. It is very desirable that societies should be founded in a large extent by local capital, and depend on the wealth of the local public, even as he expected at rates materially lower than are obtaining in other forms of credit in the neighbourhood. If, however, having to lend to members of societies at rates much below those prevailing, it is soon ascertained, there is the danger that money borrowed by societies will be lent out again at higher interest. It is accordingly feared that credit is affected by societies at very different rates in different parts of India, but so long as the result in its relation to local conditions is reasonable, it cannot be pronounced a mistake.

11. The principal object of the credit societies being, then, to provide reasonable credit for small agriculturists and small artisans, there are various systems under which societies may be organized to effect this object. Proceeding briefly there are two main lines on which societies can be organized, and these are known by the names of their organizers, Mr. B. N. Dutt and Mr. S. N. Dutt. The first is known as the "people's banks" and the second as the "people's banks." While the B. N. Dutt banks are mainly for agricultural and other classes of an "upper class," while the S. N. Dutt banks are mainly for artisans and are described as "people's banks." There are many points both of principle and of detail in which the two classes differ, but these only need be considered here, and, of the two classes of societies, (a) the liability of members, and (b) the treatment of profits. In the case of B. N. Dutt banks members are selected from a very limited area, their liability is nearly always unlimited, there are usually no shares (or if there are shares their rates are very small), and there is no division of profits. In the case of S. N. Dutt banks, liability is nearly limited, the members have shares and receive fairly high dividends. There are the two main types of society known in Europe, but there are many variations from these types both in Europe and elsewhere. Among these may be mentioned the "people's banks" of Italy organized by St. Lazzaro, somewhat on the lines of the B. N. Dutt banks, and the "people's banks" of Italy organized by St. Lazzaro, somewhat on the lines of the S. N. Dutt banks. In India, where societies have been started primarily for agricultural needs, they have, for the most part, followed the B. N. Dutt type, but European models have not been slavishly copied, and in a new and with new conditions, there has been no limitation in departing from recognized types, and many have been organized and are of the most varied features of the Indian system in its entirety. By frequent conferences among themselves the Engineers have kept in touch with the essential principles of co-operation, and so long as these principles are maintained, there can be no objection in adopting a considerable diversity of types.

12. As a society, which is based on the individual, because necessary to the society because the joint security of all its members is affected, each member must be responsible for every other member and this is that and not merely in name. They must therefore be personally acquainted with one another and be in a position to exercise mutual control in their transactions with the society. It is true there must be no such artificial limitation on membership as would lead to the society becoming a class organization, but there must be such a limitation as will ensure that the society is based on the principle of mutual responsibility. For this reason it has been found necessary, as a rule, to require that all the members of a society shall be residents of the same village. It is a general rule that there should be only one village in a society and only one society in a village. But in the case of co-operatives, where, for instance, a group of villages was concerned, then co-operatives can they may without objection be served by a co-operative society. Where a group of villages are large areas and the only special reason so thoroughly in touch with one another that they are able and willing to be jointly responsible, the restriction of responsibility is not absolute, and the law accordingly allows that members of the same tribe, class, caste or occupation, who if not resident in the same village or group of villages, may become members of the same society. Finally, it is permissible to have more societies than one in a single village in cases where a village is so large that all the residents are not suitably represented, or where a village is so divided from age such that one set of residents would not be expected to be jointly responsible for another. But the essential principle remains that residents should voluntarily consent to members as closely as they wish with one another that they are willing to do, and can be, both in name and in fact, jointly responsible.

It is for a similar reason that the formation of societies in which one or two sets of persons have associated themselves with a number of poor and ignorant members has often been discouraged. In such cases there is the danger that the bulk of the members will have no common interest and feel no mutual responsibility. So too, where there are business and landed in the same society, a conflict of interests may early arise and, for this reason, societies of poor agricultural men will often refuse to allow the land money lenders to be associated with them. Where, however, the motives of the sponsors apply to the membership are not open to suspicion, and where it is hoped that the members will assist the society by actual participation in its work, and that they have identified themselves with the interests of the members, there can be no objection whatever to its admission. It may also sometimes be advisable for different classes of members, who would be at different stages, in point of education and so on, to be associated with one another in some form. But it is a sound general principle that the members of a society should not only come from a restricted area, but should also represent a community of interest, and it is, as a rule, better that outside help should lend or deposit rather than purchase shares or lend their names as members.

24. In the absence of special orders, passed by the Local Government under the Act, the liability of the members of an agricultural credit society to make good by law is unlimited, and, as a matter of fact, this form of liability prevails in practically all such societies in the country. Even among non-agricultural societies, where limited liability is permitted by law, about half the number are so incorporated, and experience has shown that unlimited liability societies, as a rule, the only ones by which sufficiently poor people with small security to allow them obtain money on reasonable terms. It was at first very doubtful whether the idea of unlimited liability would be accepted by the people, and many experienced persons anticipated insuperable difficulties on this ground alone. The fusion of education, however, is, in fact, the Indian mind, and the principle of unlimited liability has been accepted without demur. Unlimited liability is, indeed, better understood in the villages than limited liability, and for rural credit it constitutes the main basis of co-operative in this country. In point of actual results, of which one of the members is a registered co-operative society, limited liability has been laid down by law as the usual rule, while in the case of urban banks, although a choice is allowed, the form of liability in which it is usually less common among the members and more business liability.

25. The holding of shares and division of profits are contrary to strict Brahmin principles. Shares are usually acquired with professional money, and one of the objects of a society is to limit the liability of members; while professional money is used to profit-making. Consequently, the policy was rigid to incorporation in this country, which is mainly based on Brahmin principles, has hitherto discouraged both the holding of shares and the division of profits. But as experience has shown, both in India and in Europe, that societies of the nature of a type do not always succeed in attracting members, it has been found necessary, under proper precautions, to depart from the restrictive tradition, and in Madras, for example, societies are now largely on share capital, while a modified system of shares and dividends has been adopted in the Punjab, in the United Provinces, and in Burma. This system is one which was devised to a large extent by the presence of one of the Punjab districts, and it does not contain anything that is of any of the types of society known in Europe. Under this system, as practised in the Punjab, each rural society has a share capital which the members subscribe to in instalments spread over ten years, members who join the society after the first year being required to pay up such instalments as they would have paid had they joined at the beginning. Until recently members could withdraw their shares after the third had been in existence for ten years, but a new bye law has now been introduced making all shares subscribed in future non-transferable. The profit earned on a share is not distributed, but, at the end of ten years, the accumulated profit is, after deducting one quarter for reserve, added to the value of the share, and as the increased share thus formed, a dividend will therefore be paid. After ten years a society will thus have acquired a capital composed of the shares subscribed together with the profit earned. In this capital will be added each year at least one quarter of the annual profits.

The ordinary type of agricultural society in the United Provinces and Burma is now based on somewhat similar lines, and the success obtained by co-operative credit in provinces which have introduced shares and a division of profits makes it necessary to adopt a somewhat less rigid attitude towards these methods than has hitherto been the case. There can be no question that it should be one of the first objects of a society to raise a capital of some size as far as is possible, independent of outside assistance. Deposits—such those of members—are liable to become a source of danger to the society in several ways, and it is clear that the more a society employs money of its own, which cannot be withdrawn, the stronger will be its position as a body of economic power. Proceeding, therefore, that shares do not imply any limitation of the liability of members, they undoubtedly form, together with the reserve fund, a valuable part of the assets of a society. They also offer an incentive to thrift and may very well form a permanent reserve fund to the society. Division of profits is a matter which is more open to objection, but, if there be shares, a reasonable dividend may without objection be paid, and it is not altogether logical to refuse a dividend on the shares of members, while allowing them interest on deposits, whether the members who join the society permanently or who merely pay it in a loan. The more desirous of a reasonable return on a loan the society may have to pay it in a loan. The general conclusion appears to be that, in judging whether shares and a division of profits are advisable, it is not so much a question of the right or wrong which they are introduced. If the object is the personal gain of the members, or of some of them, both measures are objectionable. But if the object is to increase the permanent resources of the society, and to offer only a moderate return to members, both appear to be legitimate especially when it is remembered that sufficient legislative safeguards exist to prevent abuse. When a share system is introduced by a division of profits has been introduced, the Local Government has always the power to check undue profit making by limiting the number of shares which can be held by a member, or by limiting the amount of dividend which can be paid. But sometimes an overstatement required to be carefully watched, as it is above all things necessary to ensure that large dividends are not paid and that the general benefit of members, which is the primary object of co-operation, is the object kept steadily in view.

16. So, too, as regards the class of security to be taken from borrowers, the same principles underlying co-operative societies are the full mutual responsibility of the members and the principle of indemnity by them of the money they borrow. In all advanced societies the whole property of the members is ultimately liable for the needs of the society. The security, however, both of the society against its members, and of members against the society, is primarily the character of the members and only in a secondary degree their personal or landed property. A loan to a member is sometimes made on the borrower's personal security only, but it would appear to be wise to secure to demand one or two securities. The loss of money by members with undivided liability on the security of several is discouraged by the law, and a loan to Government may prohibit or restrict the lending of money to a society on the mortgage of immovable property. In practice it is rare to find mortgaged loans in societies, and mortgages are a fairly safe security. In practice where there are records of debts in kind, the amount of such a loan is given out. In co-operation as it now really exists, and in which mortgages are less security, while it is some years the most reliable as a charge from the whole market is already as cheap as can be obtained from co-operative societies. Where, as is usually the case, the loan is secured by the mortgage in for a long term, there are objections to lending up capital in a form which is not readily available. There is, however, no obstacle to capital mortgages, and in some societies, such as Amherst and Berne, where land has always been pledged, this form of security is frequently resorted to, and the fact that the property is mortgaged serves to emphasize the confidence liability of a member to his society. Mortgages are useful in some cases for co-operation where the borrower has little or no security beyond his land to offer, and they are often employed to release a member from a previous mortgage by the substitution of another to the society on similar terms.

17. A question is in the co-operative societies raised: should a member be admitted to a society who is not free from outside debts? The only answer that experience admits of is—No. Every society is then until a member has been freed from outside debts, a society is not performing its full function, but it is a matter of preference to require that no one shall be admitted until a member's debts are paid off. There are, of course, extreme cases in which a man is so indebted that there is no hope of his debts ever being cleared off, and in such a case the proper course is to refuse him admission to the society. But there are many cases, including most that at first sight may appear hopeless, in which the society can do much. The principle in charge of societies here in many cases undertakes the part of consolidation, and, by offering immediate payment, have entered successful remissions of claims from creditors. A full discharge of existing debts is a necessary preliminary to admission and there is sometimes a positive considerable difficulty in securing the full extent of a member's unsecured debts, but proceeds have been put forward for increasing the amount with power to call on creditors to the extent of a fixed rate of interest, and if these should be approved, societies will be materially strengthened in dealing with the creditors' debts of their members. It is indeed in co-operation, more than in any other movement, that resource must now be had in the attempt to solve the difficult problem of individualism in this country, and co-operation has advantages which most of the other plans put forward with this object do not possess. It is applicable not only to the classes which possess land but also to others. It makes it possible to reduce outstanding debts without extravagant expenditure of public money. And what is most important of all—it ensures that the debt, when cleared of debt, shall be put in a way of life which encourages debt and thriftlessness in the future.

18. Another important matter regarding which doubt has at times been expressed is whether it is possible for a society to lend to its members for other than productive purposes. This has been considered when legislative enactments have been passed, and Government has definitely refused from giving any assistance on the objects for which loans are granted. Apart from the fact that it would be impossible to derive any complete check on the expenditure of a loan, or to say upon what account the money spent on any particular object was derived, it would be entirely impracticable to give any absolute prohibition on the grant of loans for expenditure purposes. The society occupies the place previously held by the money-lender, and it must give loans for all purposes for which loans are wanted, including any social expenditure required by public opinion, and if it failed to do this, it would only encourage its members to resort to money-lenders. It has been found by experience that men are being partly as it were responsible for one another will take care that the money spent on social expenditure is not in excess of what prescribed by public opinion in the village, and the director of the society in such matters are in most cases cheerfully accepted by the borrower. It has indeed been said, and with much truth, that by lending money for ceremonial purposes societies 'do one of the high deeds of handicraft'. While, however, loans are granted for co-operative objects it is no reason to prevent societies from being used in giving a loan that they should be informed of the object for which it is required in order that they may satisfy themselves as to its necessity, and, as a matter of fact, comparatively few loans are taken for expenditure purposes. It is also necessary that when a loan is granted for a particular purpose the society society should that the money has actually been applied to the object for which it was granted.

19. The extent to which the co-operative or should receive financial support, financial administration, from Government is a matter which is considered below. There are, however, certain methods by which co-operation may indirectly receive financial assistance. First as the whole organization has been exempted from the detailed provisions of the ordinary commercial law of Companies, so too it has been found advisable to allow of such remission in certain cases of such charges as stamp duties, income-tax and registration fees. The working of societies is further facilitated by allowing the deposits of these money in some instances through the Government Treasury; Government may help by subscribing to co-operative projects, it may go further and offer to guarantee, as it does in the case of a joint claim on the debtor's property, or it may exempt shares from assessment. But while Government has been willing to relieve necessary charges from the path of co-operation, it has been so part of its policy to render the movement dependent for its progress on Government aid. When, for instance, it is asked—was it desirably has been aided by many earnest supporters of the cause—to allow the societies a special statutory provision for the history of their debts or place of the share and exposure methods of the cause it has withheld its sanction. Although defects through fixed are exceedingly rare, it would be desirable to confer upon societies authority of some kind, if in the classes of such societies a society cannot by nature of the past activity given out, its own moral authority, which the debt, the failure is due to a careless selection of members in the first instance or to lax management. Whether or not special methods might be justified in the case of recreation at the time of liquidation, or whose value are brought by central banks against their constituent societies, there can be little doubt that if individual societies could employ such methods in dealing with their members, they would be encouraged to become serious in administration, and to enquire the vital principle that administration should be referred to those who cannot be relied upon to fulfil their obligations.

10. The funds of societies are derived from various sources, and the proprieties in which these sources are tapped vary in different parts of India. For agricultural societies generally the four main sources of income are the share capital, the deposits of members, the loans and deposits from non-members, and loans and deposits from other societies, and the percentages of the total working capital represented by each of these kinds of income is that which is the subject. Leaving out of account the money received from other societies (which is a very small item in the money from the social societies described in paragraph 23 below) it will be observed that members themselves contribute in the form of shares, loans and deposits about three-quarters of the total. An indication of the character of these funds, the result is, from the co-operative point of view, satisfactory, and it is in some respects better than societies should make their own funds. On the other hand, it is a satisfactory fact of the progress of a society if it can show that it has enlisted the confidence of the public. The second point, however, is that funds should be received in such a form that the society will receive adequate working before they are withdrawn, and from this point of view there are advantages in receiving money in form of shares. Similarly as between deposits, there is an obvious advantage in long term deposits as opposed to those received on short terms or on current account. There is no complete information regarding the ordinary length of term for which loans are given by societies to different parts of India, and it would be interesting if in future Reports would indicate such data as are available on this subject in their reports. Generally speaking, however, loans, whether made in the first instance for short terms only, or for long periods, are usually repayable after the time of harvest. And just as loans are usually repayable after a harvest, so too the demand for loans is for the most part concentrated into a period corresponding with the harvesting of the crops for the last harvest of the year, and it is noteworthy that the system on which deposits are received should accommodate itself so far as possible to these circumstances. To a certain extent this can be done by utilizing the credit facilities from central banks, but it is also necessary that individual societies should provide, so far as possible, that funds may be available when they are most in demand by regulating the ordinary length of term for which deposits are received.

11. The ability and willingness on the part of the members of credit societies to repay loans is a prime factor in the establishment of public confidence in the co-operative movement. Forethought, thrift and business habits are not characteristics of the classes for whose benefit co-operation is intended, and at the early years of the movement it would not have been surprising had the members of credit societies shown shortcomings in the matter of the repayment of their loans. On the whole, however, judging by the results, repayment seems to have been satisfactory, delay being due either to want of the business habit and to the difficulty experienced by liquidators in laying down a definite system of settlements for repayment than in many forms in which repayments. Now that experience has been gained it would be well if, so far as possible, a definite system of repayable were provided. Consequently in this regard may lead to improvement on the part of borrowers, to discipline and partially on management, and so to the 'crystallization' of loans.

12. As a test of financial stability the importance of the reserve can scarcely be overestimated. Moreover, if a source of income which may be drawn upon to help pressing it furnish certain outside use and as a reserve deposit, it protects members from money pay made under their undisciplined liability. If a company could, and, perhaps, most important of all, it binds members together. The law contemplates that when such methods of the profits shall be credited to the reserve fund, but it should be an income to be considered necessary or desirable, even in those instances, to control the progress of the fund in this figure. Subject to the order of these important points are available for three main objects, the building up of a reserve, the reduction of the interest charged from borrowers, and the distribution of dividends to members. Regarding the manner in which the reserve should be employed there has, however, been some difference of opinion. Some hold that the reserve should always be separately invested in a central bank or other reliable institution, and that unless this is done it is impossible to obtain the additional income confidence which is one of the functions of the reserve to some. Others contend that so long as a higher rate of interest can be obtained by lending it to members, it is better business to utilize the reserve in the ordinary work of the society, and where, as is the case in some provinces, the margin of interest is large and the reserve fund grows rapidly, the use of the reserve fund in this way enables the society to dispense with outside loans and deposits. In Madras and the Central Provinces the reserve is usually invested separately, while in the other large provinces it is freely used for the ordinary business of the societies. There can be little doubt that through it the earlier stages when working capital is small, the members may fairly be said to experience the working capital. It should be remembered, however, that considerable progress has been accomplished and efforts should be made, as the working capital increases, to continue by degrees more closely to this practice. The agricultural societies in India now possess a reserved 10 lakhs or 25 per cent. of the working capital, but no information is available to show in such provinces how much of this is actually invested, or what portion of the amount set aside as reserve may have been applied from the above figure on account of its deployment in the ordinary business of the societies. It may be remarked that in the German Reichsbank the reserve constitutes 25, and in the Swiss-Deutsche bank 15 per cent. of the working capital.

any more than to the value of 1 lakh in the first instance. With this fund as a bank of credit it may later determine carrying it over at the rate of four per cent. per annum, so as to meet out standing loans from the paid-up capital and interest at this rate has been guaranteed by the Government of Bombay. The bank lends to co-operative societies only and loans are made to societies direct, more especially in accordance with the development of sugar cultivation in the Deccan. The Industrial Bank in the Central Provinces was established in 1911 without any assured guarantee and is as a business dealing with central banks only. It has a capital of one lakh and should be able to bridge the ordinary commercial banks with the scale of co-operative banks in the Central Provinces, though it has, hitherto, been successful in raising locally its own capital. But although the operations of banks of this kind are confined to a single province, it is obviously apparent to the best interests of the movement that they should compete in various respects, and the banks might strictly arrange not only that there may be no overlapping in this respect, but also that the various banks of one bank may be available for each other. The responsibilities entrusted by the addition to the co-operative organizations of central and provincial banks are of a serious character. It requires the relations of such institutions with the money market on the one hand, and with their constituent societies on the other in a task, which requires a considerable degree of technical skill and the adoption of the whole co-operative movement in the sense above that all the individual society is a matter which must in the immediate future engage the serious attention of Government and of the people.

13. The establishment of these central agencies even in the lower grades has introduced a new business element into the movement, and the administration of co-operative credit must in future concern many more difficulties and complications than in the past. With the ordinary staff, both skilled and unskilled, has been added for the purposes of inspection and audit, but the questions have for special training and expert assistance are required to deal with the larger central institutions and the problems they involve will shortly have to be faced. It is already necessary in the case of some of these institutions to employ the aids to extend expert agency, but it is the scale the audit and inspection of societies is carried out by a staff authorized for the purpose either by Government or by the central agencies themselves. In most of the agricultural societies, the land administration is entirely or a most actively continuing; accounts are ordinarily of a very primitive character, and more have indeed been known where, in the absence of these accounts on the spot, accounts have been prepared by the inspecting staff. Thus in the two provinces mentioned the duties of inspection and audit are not regularly differentiated, and both of these duties have usually to be combined with the task of attending requests from outside and extending knowledge of the progress of co-operation. The staff at present is small, one—from 100 to 200 is all—but its duties are of great and increasing importance, and it is upon close inspection and trustworthy audit that the success of co-operative credit largely depend.

14. The above considerations, though introduced generally to apply to credit societies, are largely applicable to other forms of co-operation. Societies other than credit societies have been first formally recognized by the Act of 1911, and then have not yet been thus far any great development of this form of co-operation. According to the latest data, there are now in India some 170 non-credit societies, of which about half are agricultural in character, and they have been formed in order to secure for the husbandry of the community those advantages in industry and agriculture which the savings of capital, derive from the organization of labor, the use of costly machinery, and the economical business when carried out on a large scale. The management of such societies, dealing as they do with the sale and purchase of articles and the insurance of animals and produce, involves a close of problems for co-operation and difficulties that arise which are ordinary agents find it difficult to. They usually import too in the money may be necessary, possibly greater even than that of credit institutions, but it is possible they are in their infancy. They are a necessary medium to improved credit, but credit is the first essential and, until a system of credit has been firmly established as a principle, it would be dangerous to encourage too rapid development on other lines. It has indeed been suggested that the establishment of such societies should always be preceded by some kind of agricultural or industrial survey of the economic needs of the people, and the suggestion is worthy of careful consideration. The agricultural societies of this form of co-operation is at present almost entirely confined to Burma, where societies have been started for the production and sale of rice and other crops, or for the insurance of cattle. The latter class of societies is one which is intrinsically with special difficulties arising from the absence of credit, but requiring credit available on which the profits can be calculated, and in the very limited extent to which necessary credit is available and it has been proposed in Burma that in any system of cattle insurance there must also be some credit organization and means for re-insurance in order that local societies may not be failed by local calamities. In the industrial sphere there have been somewhat greater scope for co-operative societies other than those formed for the improvement of credit, and most of these are confined to the purchase and sale of articles. As in the case of credit it would appear that the most promising field for industrial co-operation lies in the improvement of the condition of the worst community, with some previous history has been made by establishing societies of household women who, by joining together, are able to purchase their raw materials and to sell their stock at more favorable rates than are available to an individual woman dealing with a middleman. Other co-operative firms, however, have started in connection with the improvement of sugar production and of milk, the supply of stores and so forth, and the restriction of trading societies has been a special feature of the co-operative movement in Mysore. In all these directions the people are still finding their way, and so questions of the kind is still in an experimental stage. There are, however, two principles which may be laid down as the basis of the experience hitherto gained. In the first place it is desirable that the management of separate societies, or, if that is not feasible, by the appointment of separate sub-committees for each branch of work, separate accounts and separate annual balance sheets being prepared and presented before being incorporated in the general returns of the society. And, secondly, although these societies are most generally for the benefit of their own members, it is some times advisable to allow some members to deal with the society, and there are indeed cases where without an outside clientele, the experience of the society would be so

58. But while the movement must be essentially a popular one, and while extensive official assistance must be secured, it by no means follows that Government should confine its efforts to the circle of those directly connected with co-operation should help itself.

It is true that the details of initiation and inspection should be left to the expert agency provided for the purpose, and it is no part of the duty of the district officer to interfere in the internal administration of societies. But as co-operative societies are no longer isolated experiments outside the sphere of district work, and as, beyond the material benefits which they offer, they represent an influence closely connected with the welfare of the people and powerful, now and in the future, for good or evil, the district officer cannot disengage himself from the movement. On the contrary, a knowledge of its operative principles and practice has now become so essential to a knowledge of modern law and it is his duty to maintain the closest touch with societies, encouraging them to progress through want of sympathy or to develop an undesirable form through want of vigilance. Without in any way becoming an active propagandist he should, personally and not through his subordinates, make himself acquainted with the progress of the movement in his district, encouraging and helping those who have fear of themselves into societies, visiting the societies and reporting on an even influence and watch, and assisting with his advice those who seek to avoid the influence of the benefits of co-operation. This is the key to the effectiveness of co-operation, not that it is to be used upon the principle that the movement, if it is to succeed, must be a popular one. Rather will it gain in strength by such encouragement and guidance while the one duty of the district officer is to work with societies the more widely will he find he has seen and valuable agencies to help him in his daily work.

It is for local Governments to consider to what extent and in what manner they may be made of societies in each province in district administration—how far they can afford a means of maintaining the good public feeling of the district—how far they can be rendered voluntary and useful in providing primary education, rural sanitation and medical relief—in what manner they can be used to train in industry and industry in carrying the principles of co-operation, or whether the training effected by them will lead to the development of a true system of village government.

In these and other ways it may be found possible to utilize the co-operative organizations, and the movement should if wisely directed, exercise an important influence in protecting the welfare of the people. But although it is still uncertain to what extent, and in what manner, societies may assist in the work of the district, there can be no doubt that a new factor in administration, well or ill directed, has come into being, and that new duties and responsibilities have been thrown upon the district officer.

59. Co-operation in India owes much to the devoted efforts of the many officials who have spent official and non-official work time and thought on the furtherance of the movement, and a special acknowledgment is due to the admirable body of Englishmen who in the various provinces have guided the societies through their earlier stages. They have as a rule been picked men. Several of them had prepared themselves for their duties by a special study of co-operation in Europe; and as a body they have applied themselves to their task with splendid energy and equally splendid patience. They have not only effected much by their own efforts, but they have succeeded in eliciting enthusiastic assistance from others, and the movement owes much to the good body of unattached workers who have so ably seconded the efforts of Englishmen. Government officials of all shades of opinion and creed have been foremost to assist not only by giving more general knowledge of the principles of co-operation and of the benefits, but also by helping forward and by giving moralizing attention to those of which they are themselves a member. Help of all kinds has come from every quarter—from Governmental from, from great bodies, from planters, from students, from sports from gentlemen, from retired Government officers—both European and Indian—from members of all denominations, from the Christian League and from numerous other Christian and non-Christian. The interest which has been aroused in many quarters, and the zeal which has long since been added to the strength of the movement, and have been a cause of the greatest encouragement to Government and its officers in the initiation of this important experiment. On some line of the unaffiliated workers Government has long since to bring special notice of the appreciation, but there are many more workers who will not count names or titles in recognition, and who indeed have acted with a sternness modesty which could be surpassed by no other movement of human kind, and the best interests of their country. To these, equally with the others, Government, which has these same interests at heart, extends its warm acknowledgments and thanks.

60. The remarkable progress which has been made during the first ten years would not have been possible by the most sagacious help to co-operation. From much help Government, inspired by the recognized goodness of Englishmen and assisted by a body of non-official workers, has grown rapidly and it now represents an influence widely affecting a large section of the people. The development which has taken place in all the most striking when it is remembered that countries that have been almost, and that the same help should be given to them, and the rapid multiplication of societies, but the success of the movement will not be complete until the policy of co-operation has been fully realized and has led to an increase of self-reliance and independence, while the country, with which Government has stimulated development has resulted in a national and healthy growth. The future is full of promise, and although under the influence of India, and with increased confidence and experience more rapid progress may be expected, the caution and restraint shown in the past should be maintained.

Co-operation has brought with it a wide circle of localities, both moral and material, and these benefits are extended wherever and to whom, but by no means exclusively, for the power agricultural classes. They are not however confined to members of any particular type, and a careful study of the Indian is given in its entirety. The long in the members of the rural society are in touch with one another and have a unity of interest, so long as the principle of self-reliance is maintained as a guiding feature, and so long as provisions are taken to prevent undue influences being attached to the position of members, there is no necessity to restrict activity to any particular type. In the desired administration of credit societies, there are various means which, subject to the restrictions noted in this discussion, may be used to improve the condition of the members and some of these are—

- (a) that societies may be a society for debt, though not necessarily discouraged, are not without their value in their nature.

(3) The rest of the Presidency with the exception of the Nigéri district and the Weyand tribe, Aringwa, Tangwani and the Adipah valley of the Makho district.

(4) The Bangwato State.

3. Tree-tapping licenses shall be issued on the application—

- (a) of licensed toddy shopkeepers in areas in which the toddy shops are sold by auction or licensed separately;
- (b) of persons having the exclusive privilege of manufacture and supply of succulent toddy known as henge or figers;
- (c) of persons that are applicants in the South Orange district, provided that the application for license is accompanied by an application for a permit for the transport of the toddy from the place of manufacture to the place of sale, and that the latter application is countersigned or acknowledged to be correct by the shopkeeper to whom the toddy is to be taken;
- (d) of tree owners generally, and of succulent-toddy tappers in the Goshan district, and in the Nwanogor, Bhamawane, Tumbi, Kibwe and Yemagwale tribes of the Kibwe division, for not more than five trees in the case of tree owners and three trees in the case of succulent-toddy tappers, for the drawing of toddy required for domestic consumption, but not for sale;
- (e) of toddy shopkeepers or retailers in the Mysore territory and in the Bangwato State desiring to obtain toddy from trees growing in British territory; and
- (f) of toddy shopkeepers in the Bechuanaland State desiring to obtain toddy from trees in British Territory provided that the application is certified or countersigned by the South African Inspector of the State.

In cases (b), (c), (d), and (e) the license may be issued in the name of the applicant himself or of his servant, and in cases (e) and (f) in the name of the applicant only.

4. Persons wishing to apply for the grant of tree-tapping licenses must first pay the fees (or the fee hereinafter provided, as the case may be) due on account of the trees which they desire to tap, into a Government treasury, which may be either the British Treasury, a Tribal Treasury or a Sikh Treasury. Districtal officers may also empower heads of villages to accept payments on account of tree-tax and to grant receipts therefor.

5. (1) Applications for the grant of tree-tapping licenses must be made in the prescribed form to the Inspector, South African and Customs Department, in charge of the office in which the trees are situated. Forms may be obtained from the Inspectors of Salt, Alcohol and Customs Department, and from all Taxalindas and Deputy Taxalindas and will be supplied free of charge. Applications put in by shopkeepers and tappers need not be stamped, those put in by other persons must bear a court-fee stamp of two annas. In any case, if the tree has been paid into treasury, the applicant must submit a certificate of payment from the treasury officer; if payment has been made to a village head the receipt must accompany the application. Mysore retailers and shopkeepers applying for licenses in British territory should pay the tree tax into the Mysore Treasury and should present before the British Taxalinda or Deputy Taxalinda concerned along with the application, in form T 27, the take set a tree-tapping license in Mysore. The tree-tax should be collected at the higher rate if the trees are at the same or on the two sides of the frontier.

(2) Applications for tree-tapping licenses, in the South Orange district should be accompanied by the name of the user intended to be included in the name of his contract.

6. Toddy shopkeepers in trade adjacent to the Mysore territory will also be allowed to tap trees in Mysore for the supply of toddy to their shops on payment of the whole of the tree-tax in one instalment into the British treasury and subject to such restrictions regarding permits, etc., as may be prescribed in this behalf. The rate of tree-tax to be paid in such cases will invariably be the higher rate in force if the trees are not the same on the two sides of the frontier.

The British and Mysore Governments reserve to themselves the right to impose, in addition to the tree-tax, a rate for the use of trees belonging to them, the same when imposed being payable by British and Mysore licensees alike. The arrangements agreed to by the British and the Mysore Governments with regard to the issue of licenses for tapping trees in either territory as the applicants of licenses to shopkeepers in the other do not prevent the conversion of trees in any specified area in the Mysore Territory or in Mysore with a view to allowing toddy or for other well-defined reasons and the mere payment of tree-tax into a British or Mysore treasury does not entitle an applicant to tapping licenses for trees so reserved.

7. Toddy shopkeepers in British territory adjoining the Bangwato State will be allowed to tap trees in the State on payment of tree-tax, the rate being the same as in the Kanyalo district. Similarly those in the Bangwato State will be allowed to tap trees in the adjoining British territory.

8. Persons applying for the issue of licenses will be responsible to Government for all sums payable in tree-tax on account of the trees licensed to be tapped.

9. (1) On receipt of an application, the Inspector, unless he sees special cause to the contrary, will at once take steps for the marking of the trees by an officer superior in rank to a petty officer and for the issue of the license. Applicants for trees shall point out to the marking officer, when required by the latter to do so, the trees applied for by them. Should they fail to do so after reasonable notice, the trees pointed out by them shall be liable to be forfeited to the Collector's Division.

(2) In the Goshan district and in the Nwanogor, Bhamawane, Tumbi, Kibwe and Yemagwale tribes of the Kibwe district, trees intended for the drawing of fermented toddy and (those for the drawing of sweet toddy shall, so far as possible, be in separate trees or blocks.

10. Collectors may, from time to time, prescribe the relative number of trees to be entered to an original application. They may also direct that the trees situated in one village only shall be included in an application.

11. No trees shall be tapped, nor shall toddy be drawn from any toddy tree, nor shall any yet be arrested to any toddy tree, until the tree has been marked by the proper officer.

12. For purposes of date trees in the Presidency and for Dabwal (Arceuthobium) trees in South Orange, tree-tapping licenses shall be issued, first in, in force from 1st October or any subsequent date in the South September immediately following, and for succulent and fig trees they shall be

III. A deposit must be made by each bidder previous to bidding and will be received by the selling officer on the day of sale. A deposit of Rs. 50 will ordinarily be required from any person wishing to bid for any important shop or any large number of shops. This will be reduced to Rs. 20 in the case of bidders for not more than two or three shops of an aggregate monthly value of Rs. 40 or less and to Rs. 5 in the case of bidders for single small shops. In the case of farms Rs. 100 will be the ordinary deposit. This will be reduced to Rs. 50 in the case of bidders for farms of an aggregate monthly rental of not more than Rs. 100 and to Rs. 10 in the case of bidders for single small farms. In the Kannur district, the selling officer may, where he finds it necessary, require a deposit of Rs. 20 only from bidders for toddy shops. In the South Canara district, the selling officers may on their discretion reduce the deposit to Rs. 2 for shops whose average monthly rental does not exceed Rs. 5.

IV. The shops or farms will be put up to auction in the order in which they are notified, unless the selling officer sees reason to change that order. Upon prices will be fixed at the discretion of the Collector. The average price placed by Government on the shops or farms will not be published, but the average of the previous five years' rentals will be notified by the Collector, whenever possible, for the information of bidders.

VIII. In case of dispute the selling officer's decision shall be final. If for any reason the highest bid is rejected, the next highest shall be taken, as the shop or farm as sold as his discretion.

IX. At the close of each day's sale, the deposits made by the unsuccessful bidders will be returned to them.
